SHAVES ONLY MILLIONAIRES

A Barber Who Makes About $3,000 a Year From Four Customers.

Thomas Whalen shaves four millionaires a day. He makes the round of his customers every morning and in three hours each morning he earns more than the average barber does in four days.

Mr. Whalen's clients are P. D. Armour, S. W. Alberton, Marshall Field and N. K. Fairbank. They employ him in the year, and his salary continues whether they are in Europe, New York, California or Chicago. His contract calls for a daily shave in Chicago, and the millionaires' clients are not to be found Whalen is not the sufferer. His "pull" is said to be of the gentlest, but his flow barbers declare it is very strong, and besides the salary he gets there is always a liberal Christmas present.

The scale of salaries paid is as follows: Mr. Armour, $75 a month; Mr. Field, $75; Mr. Alberton, $50, and Mr. Fairbank, $35. All of these gentlemen have their private barber shops, and Mr. Whalen has the running of them. He keeps each supplied with the finest razors, shears, strops, soaps, mugs and other requisites of a first class tonorial parlor. He knows the turn of every whisker of his patrons, and there is never any kick about razors with a "pull."

His labors begin early. Mr. Armour's home is his first stopping place, though recently, during that gentleman's residence in California, he has not been getting up so early. Mr. Armour has always shaved by 6 o'clock and often earlier. From there it is only a block to Mr. Field's Prairie avenue mansion, and just across the street, a little to the south, he finds Mr. Alberton ready for his daily shave. But to reach Mr. Fairbank he must make a big jump to the North Side, and his fast pace comes in good use. Cars are not uncommon, and Mr. Fairbank cannot be kept waiting or disappointed, and before 9 o'clock Whalen is at the Lake Shore Drive residence, ready for Mr. Fairbank to come to the private barber shop.

Tom Whalen is one of the best known barbers in Chicago. He has made a competency out of his work, and his income now is by no means meager, averaging close to $3,000 for the year. His last shop was in the Methodist church block. This he sold several years ago. He now devotes his attention to the four millionaire customers and several fine horses.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Satisfactory Item.

Mr. next door neighbor's hard to please. The world, he thinks, needs much improving. He even thinks I'm not the cheese. Exactly, and he talks of moving. He's everlastingly complaining. And yet it cannot be denied that while at my gate he's straining. He's really quite self-satisfied.—Chicago Record.

PLAN OF THE MAJORITY

How the Philippines Will Be Dealt With.

PRESIDENT TO HAVE FULL POWER.

Senator Elkins on the Porto Rican Tariff—Issues That Must Be Squared by Met-Senator Chandler Missed. Rivalry Between Cities.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—[Special.]—The plan of the majority party in congress for dealing with the Philippine situation is already marked out. By reporting what is known as the Spooner bill the senate Philippine committee has indicated a purpose to leave the whole matter with the president, making his power in the premises as great as it would be if the islands should remain under the present military control. There are many Republicans in congress who wish most heartily that the same policy had been adopted in respect to Porto Rico, as the affairs of that little island have occasioned more trouble in the Republican camp than all other problems combined. Senator Elkins, in discussing the matter, said: "Porto Rico is one of our children now, and we are like a mother who may be aware that her child is not all it should be, yet loves it and will seek to take the best care of it. We may not think that Porto Rico is the best thing that ever came to the United States," he said, "but we have got her, and the people are determined that she shall be treated right. Another thing, it is useless to talk about releasing the islands of the Pacific. The lust of possession has taken hold of us. We will hold all we possess, all that we have acquired. No nation voluntarily surrenders territory acquired as a result of war or purchase. The only thing to do now is to give them the best government we can and to treat them as well as we can without injuring our own people. Until there are developments which will give us more information as to the best course to pursue in the government of the islands both Porto Rico and the Philippines should be left with the president."

But It Is Too Late. While there are plenty of men in congress who agree with Mr. Elkins, the majority believe that it is too late to take that course with Porto Rico. The house having gone so far as to pass a Porto Rican tariff bill, especially after the fiercest storm that has ever swept over congress, the Republican leaders in both house and senate know that they must go on and either accept free trade or put through the house bill. All efforts to side track legislation meets with objections by men who do not want to run away from a disagreeable duty, and most men are so constituted that they prefer to do that which is regarded as unpopular with the people rather than be placed in an attitude of avoiding an issue. Senator Elkins says that if the whole matter is not left with the president congress should then decide to do the right thing. If an error has been made, it ought to be corrected. But he also says the difficulty is to find out just what is best to do, and it is when the effort is made to legislate that congress finds how meager its information is as to the conditions existing in the island of Porto Rico, as evidenced by declarations of some that the tariff is absolutely necessary as a means of raising revenue and will impose no great hardship upon the people, and directly contrary declarations, on the other hand, that free trade is the only thing that can alleviate the serious condition of the people.

They Mourn For Chandler. Senator Chandler has been absent from the senate for a week or two, and therefore the newspaper men mourn. Senator Chandler is a man that the average correspondent appeals to for a "good story." But, more than this, he had a way of engaging the senate in a lively debate and took it away from the dull and heavy rut which it sometimes falls into. He always "made news." He is the kind of a man who discusses a subject in a way to give it piquancy and spice. Besides, he knows what is going on, and with this fund of information and his epigrammatic way of stating it he always gives the newspaper men a "lead" so that they can serve something fresh for the readers of their papers. Senator Chandler will be given the "glad hand" when he returns to Washington, and it is earnestly hoped that it will be with renewed health and vigor.

A Matter of Locality. Representative Cushman was speaking the other day of the rivalry that exists between the cities of Seattle and Tacoma and said that this rivalry even extended to the famous mountain in Washington so long known as Mount Tacoma and now designated on the maps as Mount Rainier. "I was making a trip back into the state a little way," he said, "and became involved in conversation with a gentleman on the train. We looked out of the window, and he, pointing to the mountain and calling my attention, said, 'Behold Mount Tacoma.' As we progressed a little farther and the train stopped at a station he again interrupted the conversation, saying, 'Once more, behold Mount Rainier.' On the third stop it was Mount Rainier, but with each change of station he had a change of name, which only goes to show how jealous the people of the various Washington cities and towns are of their famous mountain. But to me it shall ever be Mount Tacoma."
